FROM DAKṢIṆĀ AND IJYĀ TO DHARMADĀNA AND MAHĀDĀNA—AN INDIAN SECULARIZATION PROCESS?

Harald Wiese, University of Leipzig, Faculty of Economics and Business Administration

- Introduction
- Guru and gurudakṣiṇā
- Sacrifice and dakṣiṇā
- Dharmadāna
- Mahādāna
- Multiple Indian secularization processes?
- Conclusion
Old Indian cosmology (here according to Manu) is based on the idea of an eternal cycle of what is called “Age of the gods” (devānāṃ yugam) lasting 12,000 years. Within each of these, four ages (yugas) take turns:

- $4,000 + 2 \cdot 400$ (Kṛta Age)
- $3,000 + 2 \cdot 300$ (Tretā Age)
- $2,000 + 2 \cdot 200$ (Dvāpara Age)
- $1,000 + 2 \cdot 100$ (Kali Age)

In the Kṛta Age, … people never acquire any property through unlawful means. … In the Kṛta Age, people are free from sickness, succeed in all their pursuits, and have a life span of 400 years. … Ascetic toil, they say, is supreme in the Kṛta Age; knowledge in the Tretā; sacrifice in Dvāpara; and gift-giving alone in Kali.
ROUGH OVERVIEW

BCE | CE

teaching by guru

Vedic sacrifices great gifts

with dakṣiṇā

dharmic giving without dakṣiṇā

GURU AND GURUDAKŚIṆĀ: PATTERN

Guru

| teaching, bed and board |

fee-gift dakśiṇā

student
GURU AND ĀCĀRYA

- guru:
  - heavy, weighty,
  - as in Latin vir gravis:
    - a weighty man,
    - i.e. a man of importance and dignity

- ācārya:
  - the man who teaches the right conduct
  - the man who must be approached
DID GURUS WANT SUCCESS?

- Taittirīya Upanisad (6. to 5. centuries BCE): The teacher’s prayer
  Students, may they come to me!
  Students, may they flock to me!
  ...
  May I be famous among men!
  More affluent than the very rich!

- Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad (7. to 6. centuries BCE):
  Once when Janaka, the king of Videha, was formally seated, Yājñavalkya came up to him.
  Janaka asked him: “Yājñavalkya, why have you come? Are you after cows or subtle disquisitions?”
  He replied: “Both, your majesty.”
MARKETING MIX

- product instruments
  configuration of something valued
- distribution instruments
  placing the offer at the disposal
- price instruments
  determination of the compensation and sacrifices
- communication instruments bringing the offer to the attention and influencing the feelings and preferences about it
PRICE INSTRUMENTS: DAKŠIṆĀ (FEE FOR VEDIC STUDY)

- Taittirīya Upanisad \((dhana = \text{valuable gift})\):

  After the completion of vedic study, the teacher admonishes his resident pupil:

  “Speak the truth. Follow the Law.
  Do not neglect your private recitation of the Veda.
  After you have given a valuable gift \((dhana)\) to the teacher, do not cut off your family line.”

  Treat your mother like a god. Treat your father like a god.
  Treat your teacher like a god. Treat your guests like gods.”

- Āpastamba-Dharmasūtra:

  After learning as much as he can, he should present the fee for vedic study \((vedadakṣiṇā)\), a fee that is procured righteously and according to his ability.
  If his teacher has fallen into hardship, however, he may seize it from an Ugra or a Śūdra.

  [An Ugra has a Kṣatriya father and a Śūdra mother.]
The people involved in a sacrifice:

- the yajamāna or svāmin, i.e., the patron who has the sacrifice performed on his behalf (payment, merit)
- the devatā, i.e., the god to whom the sacrifice is addressed, and
- the ṛtvij, i.e., the officiating priest(s).

Four basic elements of a sacrifice:

- the śraddhā that the yajamāna entertains with respect to both ritual and officiating priest
- the dīkṣā, i.e., the consecration of the yajamāna,
- the yajña, i.e., the sacrifice in the narrow sense, and, finally,
- the dakṣiṇā
the “sacrifier”, i.e., “the subject to whom the benefits of sacrifice thus accrue, or who undergoes its effects” (above: the \textit{yajamāna}), the “objects of sacrifice”, i.e., “those kinds of things for whose sake the sacrifice takes place” (above: related to the merit enjoyed by the \textit{yajamāna})

“consecration” of sacrifier or of objects of sacrifice, i.e., passing “from the common into the religious domain” (above, \textit{dīkṣā}) the “victim”, i.e., “any oblation, even of vegetable matter, whenever the offering or part of it is destroyed”, and, to a lesser degree, the “sacrificer”, i.e., “[a]n intermediary, or at the very least a guide” who is “[m]ore familiar with the world of the gods, in which he is partly involved through a previous consecration” (above, \textit{ṛtvij})

Verily, there are two kinds of gods:

- for, indeed, the gods are the gods;
- and the Brāhmans who have studied and teach sacred lore are the human gods.

The sacrifice of these is divided into two kinds:

- oblations constitute the sacrifice to the gods;
- and gifts to the priests that to the human gods.
To my mind, the dakṣinā taken by a guru is basically the same concept as the dakṣinā taken by a priest officiating at a sacrifice. With respect to the latter:

Max Weber (1921): The brahmin only took presents (dakshina), not a salary. Heesterman (1959): The dakṣinā is a gift rather than a salary. Malamoud (1976), “Les ṛtvij sont, pour le temps de la cérémonie, au service du yajamāna (ou plutôt au service de la cérémonie elle-même)”.

Dakṣinā is a hybrid form of payment, a fee-gift:

- a fee to be given
  - to a particular person who has performed a particular service
  - similar to a vetana (wage,) a hired man can expect in return for his services.

  See also Kauṭilya’s treatment of partnerships of officiating priests and, in particular, the context of working slaves, employees, and partnerships of agriculturists and traders.
- that shares a gift’s property of not fixing a particular amount agreed upon ex ante
SACRIFICE AND THE HYBRID NATURE OF DAKŚIŅĀ

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>fixed amount</th>
<th>payment obligation to a specific receiver</th>
<th>payment to any worth receiver</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>vetana</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>amount payable śaktitāḥ</th>
<th>dakśiṇā payable to Vedic priest or guru</th>
<th>dāna</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>
Dawning today, the bounteous Dawns brighten the benefactors for the giving of largesse. In (a place) without brightness let the niggards sleep, unawakening in the middle of darkness.

To them bring lofty brilliance and glory, o bounteous Dawn, to the patrons who apportion to us benefits consisting of horses and cows - o well-born lady, liberal with horses.

Impelling every god to largesse, rousing liberalities in our direction, dawning widely, impart insights to us for our gain. - Do you protect us always with your blessings.

Bloomfield (1908) interprets in this manner: “That is to say, make our poetry so clever that it shall not fail to stimulate the liberality of the patron of the sacrifice!”
As regards its immediate purpose, or its economic aspect, it is thoroughly utilitarian and practical. Its purpose is

- to secure happiness and success, health and long life for man, notably the rich man, while living upon the earth;
- to secure to a very talented and thrifty (economical, flourishing, mean, HW) class of priest-poets abundant rewards in return for their services in procuring for men this happiness, success, and so on;
- to satisfy the divine powers, visible and invisible, beneficent and noxious, gods and demons, that is, to establish livable relations between gods and men; and, finally,
- to secure after death the right to share the paradise of the gods in the company of the pious fathers that have gone there before.
Taittirīya Saṃhitā:

O ladle, fly away filled,
And well filled do thou fly back;
Like wares, O Śatakratu,
Let us barter food and strength.

Give thou to me; I shall give to thee;
Bestow upon me; I shall bestow upon thee;
Accept my offering;
I shall accept thy offering.

Commentary:

O ladle, being filled with the disappearing cream, fly away, go towards Indra. Being well filled again by wealth through his favour, return to us by the power produced by him. O Śatakratu, let us two barter as (one barters about) prices. As someone gives his own wealth in this world and buys grain etc., in that same manner I give disappearing cream to you, Indra, and buy food and strength.
This water remains the same: it goes up and down throughout the days.

Thunderstorms vivify the earth, and fires vivify heaven.
There is scarcely any idea which has suffered so much from the utilitarian aspects of Vedic religion as the Vedic idea of faith.

- ... The word starts well in the Rig-Veda. It means ... the belief in the existence of the gods, and their interference in the life of man.

- Next, faith is wisdom; faith is the sister of wisdom ...

- Unfortunately, the Vedic conception of faith, at least the prominent or average conception sinks to a much lower plane. In the main and in the end, faith expresses itself in works, and the Brahmins who are anything but mealy-mouthed (hypocritical, HW) have seen to it that they shall be benefited by these works. In other words, he who gives baksheesh (dakshinā) to the Brahmins, he has faith (śraddhā). ...

- The frank system of barter of the sacrificer's soma and ghee for the god's good gift and protection, ...
Bloomfield … n’as pas assez de sarcasmes ou plutôt d’ironique admiration pour ces clercs qui réclâment avec astuce et insolence leur ‘bakchich’. … Cette analyse, avec le jugement moral qu’elle implique, ne nous apprend pas grand-chose. … L’interprétation de Bloomfield … est décevante parce qu’elle tourne court: ayant découvert, sans grande peine, que c’est l’intérêt des brâhmanes que de tenir des discours à la gloire de la dakṣinā, ils dédaignent d’étudier les termes et l’organisation de ces discours.
The unbeliever sees in these rites only vain and costly illusions, and is astounded that all mankind has so eagerly dissipated ist strength for phantom gods. But there are perhaps true realities to which it is possible to attach the institution in its entirety. Religious ideas, because they are believed, exist; they exist objectively, as social facts. The sacred things in relation to which sacrifice functions, are social things. And this is enough to explain sacrifice.

[...] personal renunciation of their property by inidivduals and groups nourishes social forces

[...] individuals find their own advantage

[...] they invest with the authority of society their vows, their oaths, their marriages. They surround, as if with a protective sanctity, the fields they have ploughed and the houses they have built.
DHARMADĀNA: DEFINITION

- One should as a matter of routine obligation painstakingly offer sacrifices and donate gifts with a spirit of generosity, for these two things, when performed with a spirit of generosity and with well-acquired wealth, become imperishable.

- When a person gives as a matter of routine obligation to worthy recipients independently of any specific purpose, it is called a Gift Based On Duty (dharmadāna).

- Moreover a gift becomes greater and greater in accordance with the excellence of the recipient. Thus, one should know that when a gift is given to one’s teacher, one’s mother, one’s father, and a Vedic savant, each time the resulting merit or sin becomes increasingly a hundred-thousand times greater.

- Non-reciprocal gifts are like milking a cow whose calf has died and which is consumed with thirst. Worldly matters do not pertain to the law; a giver obtains an unseen gift and is not seen enjoying that gift, since he does not return to this world and his gift is endless.
DHARMADĀNA: PATTERN

giver

gift (dāna)

merit, fruit punya, phala

worthy brahmin (pātra)
Brick (2015):
Śraddhā initially denotes trust, confidence, or even faith in general, but early on comes to denote specifically trust or faith in the efficacy of prescribed ritual acts—the first meaning of the term in the dānanibandhas. Significantly, a person would express this specific form of trust through munificent gifts to priests and other persons. Thus, śraddhā soon begins to refer to a spirit of generosity or ‘joy in gifting’ (Spendefreudigkeit)—the word’s second meaning in the dāna literature. These two significations of the term, therefore, have the relationship of cause and effect, for trust in the efficacy of prescribed ritual acts results in a spirit of generosity. As a consequence, it is often difficult to discern in which of these two meanings the term is being used. Perhaps, in many cases śraddhā has both meanings, so that discerning between these two senses of the word is fundamentally misguided.
Whether small or large, the size of a gift does not bring about its benefits, but rather the spirit of generosity and the means available to the donor associated with a gift—indeed, only these two things cause prosperity or ruin.
So long as it does not hurt his family, a man can give away any of his property except for his wife and his sons, but not the entirety of his wealth if he has descendants, nor anything he has promised to another.
An owner’s wealth is what he gives and what he eats, for others fool around with the wife and wealth of a dead man.

Donating is worthwhile if the fruit-gift ratio is sufficiently large, i.e., if \( \frac{Ph}{D_G} > \frac{\delta}{\sigma} \)
DHARMADĀNA: HOW TO MAKE GIVING ATTRACTIVE TO THE GIVER

śraddhā (as spirit of generosity) effective

śraddhā ineffective

$slope \frac{\delta}{\sigma}$
Dharmadāna: How to Make Giving Attractive to the Giver

Ph

śraddhā effective and

D₇ deya

but

D₇ adeya

śraddhā ineffective

slope $\frac{\delta}{\sigma}$
SELF-SERVING BRAHMIN? YES, BUT

1. Tough requirements for a worthy recipient of dāna or for an able officiating priest:

Discipline, austerity, self-control, liberality, truthfulness, purity, vedic learning, compassion, erudition, intelligence, and religious faith—these are the characteristics of a Brahmin.

One can know a person’s virtue by living with him, his purity by interacting with him, and his wisdom by talking with him. A recipient should be tested in these three things.

2. Functional theory of the gift

Brahma, after performing ascetic toil, created Brahmans to protect the Veda, to bring satisfaction to ancestors and gods, and to safeguard dharma.
Next, I will explain the unsurpassable Great Gift called the Gift of the Wish-Granting Tree, which destroys all sins. When an auspicious day arrives, as in the Gift of the Man on the Balance, a man should have Brahmans declare the day auspicious, summon the World-Protectors, appoint officiating priests, have a pavilion constructed, and procure equipment, ornaments, clothes, etc. He should have a golden tree made that is adorned with various fruits; and on it he should place assorted birds, clothing, ornaments, and garments. He should acquire between three and one thousand palas of gold according to his means and have the Wish-Granting Tree constructed with half of the acquired gold. […] When a man gives the Great Gift in accordance with the rules here prescribed, he is freed from all sins and obtains the reward of a Horse-Sacrifice.
MAHĀDĀNA

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Objects given to non-officiating receivers</th>
<th>Objects given to guru/dvija/ṛtvij</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Gift of the Man on the Balance</td>
<td>unspecified gifts to downtrodden, destitute, distinguished people</td>
<td>gold and villages to officiating priests</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gift of the Golden Womb</td>
<td>honour many more people wholeheartedly</td>
<td>gold to exemplary Brahmin priest</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gift of the Brahma-Egg</td>
<td></td>
<td>gold and jewels to Brahmans officiating the rite</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gift of the Wish-Granting Tree</td>
<td></td>
<td>gold to preceptor and officiating priestgold and jewels to Brahmans officiating the rite</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
king as patron of a mahā-dāna

as in dharmadāna

officiating priest (ṛtvij) allowing downtrodden, destitute, distinguished people

unspecified gifts

lavish gifts

ceremonial activities

merit, fruit punya, phala
Heim (2004):

“The principles of the Vedic sacrifice rested on reciprocity […] between the Vedic gods and humans […]. But the mahādāna […] did not appeal to reciprocity or bargaining with the gods, but rather entailed worship or honoring them. [G]ifts and pūjās […] were made out of respect and honor, rather than because [the god] needed or desired them.”

Inden (1979):

Mahādānas seem to mirror Buddhist dāna and pūjā ceremonies.
MAHĀDĀNA

Heim (2004):

“The ceremonialism of dāna also tends to make a gift a public affair rather than a private matter. … …
The king displays and centralizes his own power and glory worshipping the brahmans and lavishing upon them prestigious gifts.”

Indeed, one effect or one motivation of having a mahādāna performed may be to produce the common knowledge of the king’s power. Then, not only do people see how resourceful he is, but they also see that others see and possibly interpret the event in this manner. And, they see that others observe others notice this event, etc.

See Michael Suk-Young Chwe:

Verily, there are two kinds of gods:

- for, indeed, the gods are the gods;
- and the Brāhmans who have studied and teach sacred lore are the human gods.

The sacrifice of these is divided into two kinds:

- oblations constitute the sacrifice to the gods;
- and gifts to the priests that to the human gods, to the Brāhmans who have studied and teach sacred lore.

- With oblations one gratifies the gods,
- and with gifts to the priests the human gods, the Brāhmans who have studied and teach sacred lore.

Both these kinds of gods, when gratified, place him in a state of bliss.
MULTIPLE INDIAN SECULARIZATION PROCESSES?

Secularization is about the decline of beliefs, practices, and institutions that concern
a) otherworldly beings (“gods”),
b) worshipping or honouring them,
c) catering to those beings’ needs,
d) material consumption during “religious” ceremonies and of material investment for housing these ceremonies (temples),
e) the material wellbeing of (officiating) priests and the respect owed to them,
f) life after death (in “heaven”),
g) future lives to come (brought about by “rebirth”), and/or
h) interference of otherworldly beings on this earth (against Cartesian Deism)

Yes. Vedic sacrificing → to classical dharmadāna and mahādāna involves
i. giving to gods → to humans (a, c, d)
ii. reduced material consumption (d)
iii. sacrifice → pūjā (c → b) and
iv. thisworldly → otherworldly fruit (!) (h → f/g)
THE VEDIC BRANCHES

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>Rgveda</th>
<th>Yajurveda</th>
<th>Sāmaveda</th>
<th>Atharvaveda</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>foundational text</td>
<td>Rgveda Saṃhitā</td>
<td>Taittirīya S.</td>
<td>Vājasaneyi S.</td>
<td>Sāmaveda S.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Atharvaveda S.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brāhmaṇa</td>
<td>Aitareya Br.</td>
<td>Taittirīya Br.</td>
<td>Šatapatha Br.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Āranyaka</td>
<td>Aitareya Ā.</td>
<td>Taittirīya Ā.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Upaniṣad</td>
<td>Kauṣītaki U.</td>
<td>Taittirīya U.</td>
<td>Brhad-āranyaka U.</td>
<td>Chāndogya U.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Muṇḍaka U., Praśna U.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
In Vedic times, the slaughter of animals could occur only in the context of sacrifices. Thus, the sacrifice need not entail economic sacrifices. In particular, the non-edible parts used to be sacrificed, the edible ones are partly sacrificed and partly eaten.

However, sacrificing ghee into the fire, surely implies the destruction of that precious substance.
WHO PUNISHES A MISBEHAVING KING?

King is responsible for punishing his subjects. Manu demands:

The king should administer appropriate Punishment on men who behave improperly. ... If the king fails to administer Punishment tirelessly on those who ought to be punished, the stronger will grill the weak like fish on a spit.

How about the king’s incentives to admininister justice in the correct manner? Manu points to Varuna as chastiser of kings:

Varuna holds the rod of punishment over kings

Regressus ad infinitum?
WHO PUNISHES A MISBEHAVING KING?

For the “Varuna as the chastiser” argument to go through, it is not the king’s belief that is relevant. Rather, the subjects need to believe that the king is a believer. Thus, we need second-order beliefs which are more difficult to uphold than first-order ones.

Belief argument too facile?

Does it imply that the king, the most powerful agent himself, would somehow need to punish himself? Against this idea, Kane has already opined that these prescriptions [...] were counsels of perfection and must have been futile. No king would ordinarily fine himself.
WHO PUNISHES A MISBEHAVING KING? MANU:

A good king must never take the property of someone guilty of a grievous sin causing loss of caste; if he takes it out of greed, he becomes tainted with the same sin.

He should offer that fine to Varuna by casting it into water, or present it to a Brahmin endowed with learning and virtue.

Varuna is the lord of punishment, for he holds the rod of punishment over kings; and a Brahmin who has mastered the Veda is the lord of the entire world.

When a king refrains from taking the fines of evildoers, in that land are born in due course men with long lives; the farmers` crops ripen, each as it was sown; children do not die; and no deformed child is born.
WHO PUNISHES A MISBEHAVING KING? MANU:

Pure waste?

Alternative: giving to Brahmins.

Varuna clause = another clever device by Brahmins to gain influence and wealth?

Perhaps not (only):

- The king likes to be reckoned a just king and enjoy the loyalty of his ministers and subjects.
- How can he, even if well-intended, convince the subjects? Just saying: “I am a just king” will generally not suffice.
- The Varuna clause may help the king to prove that he is a good king, a king who would not take property as a fine in order to enrich himself or in order to fill his depleted treasury. The best way to do this would then be a ritual, with Brahmins performing the rites and many onlookers.